THE QUALITY AND STANDARDS OF THE CARE

On the basis of the evidence collected on this inspection:

The quality and standards of the care are good. The registered person meets the National Standards for under 8s day care and childminding.

WHAT SORT OF SETTING IS IT?

The childminder has been registered since 2005. He works with his wife who is his co-childminder. They live with their two children aged four and six years. They live in a house in a residential area of Beckenham. Within walking distance of parks, schools, shops and public transport.

The childminder is registered to care for a maximum of three children at any one time when working alone, and a maximum of six children when working with his wife. They are currently minding one child under five.

The family have two pet cats and attend local toddler groups.

THE EFFECTIVENESS OF THE PROVISION

Helping children to be healthy

The provision is good.

Children take part in a range of activities that contribute to their good health and physical development, such as regularly playing in the garden, or at the local allotment. They practise physical skills such as kneading and rolling play dough and using large physical equipment in the garden.

Children are cared for in a clean, well-organised and comfortable home. They learn about the importance of good hygiene practices, such as washing their hands when appropriate. This reduces the risk of cross contamination. The childminder's effective sick child policy ensures the risk of the spread of infection is minimised.

The childminder keeps clear and accurate records. For example, of any accidents. He is trained in first aid ensuring accidents are dealt with appropriately. Children are provided with a healthy and nutritious diet. They are encouraged to snack on a variety of fresh fruits and vegetables and are offered drinks regularly. The children are encouraged to be involved in the cultivation of vegetables in the allotment to promote healthy living.

Protecting children from harm or neglect and helping them stay safe

The provision is good.

The home is child orientated and welcoming. Play resources are stored at a low level to enable children to self select. Children are able to play freely and safely around the home and garden because the childminder ensures the resources provided are suitable for the age and stage of the children playing with them.

He is aware of potential risks in his home and has put effective measures in place. For example, stair gates and socket covers. This ensures that hazards are minimised to keep children safe. However, there is a large trampoline in the garden which could prove hazardous. Minded children are not using it presently. There is very good supervision of children as the childminder works with his wife who is his co-childminder.

The childminder demonstrated a good understanding of child protection issues. He recognises his responsibility towards the children in his care and understands the procedures he must follow if concerned about a child's welfare.

Helping children achieve well and enjoy what they do

The provision is good.

Children are confident and settled and make themselves at home within the child orientated setting. The children relate well to the childminding environment because he ensures the children are treated as one of the family. His enthusiasm and knowledge of the children's interests helps the children to play well together. The children are offered many creative activities because of his wife's (co-childminder) knowledge and skill in this area. This contributes well to their development.

The childminder regularly takes the children out to local open spaces and toddler groups. They are introduced to nature and the local wild life when the childminder walks them around the allotments. Children also have direct access to the garden, which promotes their physical development and enjoyment of the outdoors.

The consistent routine helps children to feel secure. The childminder has a relaxed manner which encourages the children to talk to him. This encourages them to express their ideas and helps them feel good about themselves. Children are learning to be independent when they access resources for themselves and make choices in their play.

Helping children make a positive contribution

The provision is good.

Children benefit from positive relationships between the childminder and their parents. He gains detailed information about the children to ensure appropriate care is given. Parents are kept up-to-date with what their children have been doing by daily verbal contact when information is shared. This helps children experience consistent care. Parents are shown a port-folio to inform them about the service provided. The childminder discusses useful information with parents at their first visit and encourages regular "settling in meetings", which are flexible and led by the parents. This helps the children to settle well.

The childminder has a consistent approach to managing children's behaviour, which takes into account their age and stage of development. His good example help children to behave well. He has a sound behaviour management policy and will discuss and negotiate with parents to ensure consistency.

The childminder provides activities and play resources that help children to value differences and appreciate the world around them. The childminder values honesty and is realistic in his outlook. He has a positive attitude to providing an inclusive environment where all children are welcomed.

Organisation

The organisation is good.

The children feel at home and at ease in the well-organised child orientated environment which helps them gain confidence and be independent. Children's play opportunities are maximised because of the skills of both the childminders who ensure they understand the children's interests and abilities. This contributes to continuity in the children's care and learning. The childminder has attended training to ensure his service is up-to-date.

The childminder works with his wife as his co-childminder. They work well as a team meeting the needs of all the children well. The childminder is conscientious and has a good understanding of the National Standards. He is well organised with appropriate policies and procedures in place, however, the complaints procedure is not yet in line with current legislation. Nevertheless they work well in practice to keep children healthy and safeguard their welfare.

Children's needs are well met because of the good relationships and communication with the parents. Parents are well informed about their child's day and the care provided. The childminder meets the needs of the range of children for whom he provides.
