Overall outcome Boarding provision

The school meets all of the national minimum standards that were checked during this inspection

Main inspection findings

The overall experiences and progress of children

- Boarders enjoy and benefit from their boarding experience. Many speak about the value of making new friends from different countries, cultures and faiths. They embrace the opportunity to learn about and value difference. This is an area of particular focus and celebration for the director of boarding.
- Some groups of boarders are under-represented; for example, the number of boys vastly outweighs the number of girls and a high proportion of boarders attend the associated football academy. Those boarders from minority groups have mixed opinions on the impact of this. Some say that they enjoy the difference while others feel that they sometimes miss out on desired activities because there is not enough interest. Boarding staff are aware of this and have introduced a range of consultation mechanisms to inform the activities programme.
- The recent changes to the boarding arrangements are welcomed, particularly by the small group of junior boarders, who describe their house as 'cosy'. They like living alongside the older girls, who they find 'helpful and caring'. This arrangement was instigated by the director of boarding, whose aim is to embed a family feel across the boarding provision.
- Currently, there is some disparity in the overall quality of the boarding accommodation. Some areas of the boarding houses have been identified by leaders as requiring further financial investment and improvement. Consequently, a plan of repairs, renewals and in some areas, refurbishment, is under way. A group of sixth-form boarders have recently had free rein to redecorate a basement area as their own common room space.
- Boarding staff are keenly aware of the individual and specific support needs of the boarders. In these circumstances, written plans guide the staff to provide the necessary support and intervention. Those records sampled included boarders who have additional learning and/or medical needs.
- Boarders understand the school's rules and behavioural expectations. There is clear policy and guidance in respect of their use of free time; for example, stricter return times and out-of-bounds areas for younger boarders. The diverse backgrounds of the boarding community bring some challenge for the boarding team in this regard, particularly when some boarders have been used to much higher levels of freedom before joining the school. Boarders would benefit from strengthened consultation opportunities on such matters to increase their understanding of why and how such guidance is in place.

- Similarly, there is a need to place a stronger focus on educative approaches in respect of acceptable behaviour, particularly in relation to boarders' use of social media. When bullying incidents have occurred in this regard, leaders have been swift to take decisive action. In serious cases, temporary and permanent exclusions have been used. Although assemblies, boarders' meetings and posters are used to convey the school's stance on bullying, there is further work to do to fully embed a culture to prevent lower-level incidents from being tolerated and consequently, escalating.

How well children are helped and protected

- Boarders say that they feel safe and protected in their boarding house. Their positive relationships with staff mean that all boarders spoken with identified a trusted adult whom they can go to in times of need.
- Safeguarding arrangements are clear, with roles and responsibilities known to all. Additional deputy safeguarding lead roles have been created and safeguarding policies have been updated, in line with statutory guidance.
- Staff across all disciplines were able to demonstrate a sound understanding of their own safeguarding responsibilities. The designated safeguarding leads (DSLs) are suitably trained and they make appropriate and timely referrals and consultations to external safeguarding agencies. School bus drivers work to a code of practice and alert school staff to any behaviour issues that occur on such journeys.
- The DSLs continue to remind all staff to use the electronic reporting and recording mechanism, 'My Concern', in their efforts to encourage all staff to report any concern that they may have about any pupil, regardless of its seemingly low-level nature. This approach is underpinned by a whole-school safeguarding audit completed last summer, that resulted in highlighting areas for targeted action/improvement.
- The school follows safer recruitment practice guidance and seeks to make continuing improvements to be satisfied that staff are safe people. An example of this is by encouraging staff to register with the online Disclosure and Barring Service Update Service, for which the school will pay the cost. Routine checks are diligently completed on the single central register to ensure continuing compliance.
- Complaints policies and procedures are communicated to parents, boarders and third parties. Parents spoken with said that they are confident in raising concerns; many have been satisfied with earlier, informal processes and have therefore not needed to escalate matters. The recording of formal complaints, including any investigation and outcome, is clear, but there are missed opportunities to collate and record issues and concerns that have not met the formal threshold. This is a missed opportunity for leaders to consider and learn from emerging topics and issues at the earliest possible stage.

The effectiveness of leaders and managers

- Significant changes have occurred to the leadership arrangements for the boarding provision since the last inspection. A newly appointed director of boarding is introducing well thought-out changes that started with how the two boarding houses are now occupied. Consequently, junior boarders now live alongside girls in one boarding house. The other boarding house is dedicated to senior boys.
- Leaders have listened carefully to the views and wishes of the boarders in delivering this change. For example, a small group of senior girls did not want to move. This group has remained in situ, with their own dedicated area within the house.

- The change of ownership since the last inspection has brought significant change and improvement to governance and quality assurance. Matters relating to health and safety are scrutinised by designated leads from the wider organisation. Leaders and managers throughout the school are held to account.
- Boarding staff are particularly positive about their leadership arrangements. One reason for this is the more targeted approach now given to their own professional development. Boarding staff appraisal processes are becoming more embedded. Another reason relates to the recently introduced boarding staff meetings that bring both boarding teams together to discuss and compare topical issues.
- The director of boarding is a member of the school's senior leadership team. Consequently, she takes every opportunity to demonstrate her passion and drive for the boarding provision to be a critical element of the school's overall provision. Her boarding development plan is both realistic and ambitious.
