What is it like to attend this early years setting?

The provision is inadequate

Children's health and safety is not assured because there are breaches of requirements in relation to safeguarding that undermine children's health and welfare. Furthermore, children's well-being is compromised as staff fail to ensure that risk assessments are implemented effectively. For instance, staff do not identify when outdoor equipment is too wet and slippery for children to climb. They fail to quickly take action when informed that furniture is broken.

The quality of education is supported well, leading to good outcomes for children. Children enjoy a broad and balanced curriculum, which considers their interests and next steps in learning. Staff have high expectations for all children in their care. There is a strong focus on supporting children's communication and language skills. This includes those children who are learning to speak English as an additional language. Children display positive behaviour and know what is expected of them. They have appropriate manners and say 'please' and 'thank you'. Children listen and show respect to others.

Although parents do not enter the nursery because of COVID-19 (coronavirus) restrictions, staff make every effort to talk with them about their children. Staff support parents to share information about their children's development and exchange regular updates about their progress on a digital platform. Parents report that their children look forward to the days that they attend. Children demonstrate that they feel happy and secure. In particular, babies are settled and form strong attachments with their key person, who supports their emotional well-being effectively.

What does the early years setting do well and what does it need to do better?

- This inspection was brought forward to look into concerns around food hygiene, health and staff deployment. At inspection, it was found that staff do not ensure that the premises and equipment are safe and suitable. For example, staff do not demonstrate how they are managing safety and do not take all reasonable steps to ensure that children are not exposed to the dangers presented by broken furniture or a wet slide. Staff fail to act quickly when children drop food onto the floor and put it into their mouths. This means that children's well-being is undermined.
- Leadership is weak. The manager does not ensure that all staff have a good understanding of the nursery's safeguarding procedures. Some staff lack knowledge of how to notify relevant agencies with statutory responsibilities without delay. This means that the team are unable to work together successfully and fail to protect children from potential harm. This puts children at risk.

- Staff generally take part in discussions with the manager to support their professional development. However, the monitoring of staff performance does not focus sharply on identifying and sharing strengths in teaching. The provider fails to fully consider ways to further develop the manager's personal effectiveness and the quality of staff practice.
- Staff understand child development well and the importance of building on what children know to prepare them for the next stage of their learning. Staff ensure that the experiences children receive are meaningful and help progress their knowledge and skills. For example, staff interact well to encourage younger children to solve problems as they position cube pieces and select the correct shape to add to the tower. Older children show curiosity and patience as they independently solve challenging geometric shape puzzles.
- Staff working with the babies and toddlers plan some stimulating activities and set out enjoyable resources. For instance, staff encourage younger children to use animal figures to explore paint and they encourage them to observe the marks these make in the tray, which the babies enjoy. Staff support toddlers' communication skills effectively. They repeat what children say and respond clearly to their words or babbles.
- Children are confident and independent. They are consistently offered choices, for example, about which activity they would like from a wide range of accessible resources. Older children butter their own crackers at snack time and help to wipe the tables and wash up their plates at lunch, developing good coordination and physical skills.
- Staff provide a well-organised learning environment. They provide children with various experiences in the nursery to help to narrow any gaps in their learning. Children take responsibility for rolling their mats out for a yoga session and are mindful of others' space. Staff link physical movement effectively to children's interests to engage them fully. For example, staff retell the familiar story of 'We're Going on a Bear Hunt', which children translate into physical actions. Older children enthusiastically offer their ideas for different moves.

Safeguarding

The arrangements for safeguarding are not effective.

Staff's safeguarding knowledge is varied. Some staff do not fully understand their own roles and responsibilities to safeguard children. For instance, staff do not know what to do if they need to escalate a safeguarding concern outside of the nursery. Although the manager ensures that staff receive relevant training, she does not check that all staff have a secure knowledge of safeguarding. This means that staff cannot be relied upon to safeguard children's welfare. Furthermore, risk assessments are not implemented effectively to keep children safe. Despite this, staff have a sufficient knowledge of the basic signs of abuse and neglect. Leaders ensure that all staff are suitable to work with children and carry out appropriate checks to ensure that they remain suitable.

What does the setting need to do to improve?

To meet the requirements of the early years foundation stage and Childcare Register the provider must:
