This inspection

The effectiveness of the home and the progress and experiences of children and young people since the most recent full inspection

This home was judged good at the last full inspection. At the interim inspection, Ofsted judges that it has declined in effectiveness.

This inspection was brought forward to investigate specific concerns that were reported to Ofsted. Inspectors were aware during this inspection that serious child protection allegations were being investigated by the appropriate authorities. While Ofsted does not have the power to investigate allegations of this kind, actions taken by the setting in response to the allegations were considered alongside other evidence available at the time of the inspection to inform the inspectors' judgements.

Two requirements and two recommendations were set at the full inspection. One requirement regarding staff supervision is not met. The recommendations in respect of risk assessments and maintenance and decor of the home are now raised as requirements as they have not been met.

This home is an unhappy one. Children's experiences are poor and staff morale is low. Children's progress has been limited. Three out of the six children living at the home have had notice served on their placements. Although, for one child, discussions had previously been held about the potential for the child to move out, the child was not aware of how soon they would be leaving the home. This child said that they were upset that they had to leave the home so quickly. Children have education placements. However, for some children, their attendance is sporadic.

The manager has been in post since June 2021. Despite this, she is not registered with Ofsted.

Children said that they feel that some children are favoured by the manager and treated differently as a result. Specific examples were given of what some children are allowed and not allowed to do when refusing to attend school. Children said that one child who refuses to hand her phone in to staff is treated more favourably than others. Children said that they feel that their positive behaviours, such as going to school and handing in their phones, are not rewarded and that some children's unwanted behaviour goes unchallenged.

Staff said that they feel unable to implement boundaries with the children as this is not approved of by the manager. Staff and children say that children's behaviours have become more unsettled in recent months, and this has left some children feeling scared at times.

Five out of the six children said that they have felt let down by the manager as they have not been able to build trusted relationships with her. Children do not feel confident that the manager will act on their wishes and feelings. In addition, children have been made privy to private conversations that should have remained between staff. Staff have failed to model positive relationships or help children to understand mutually respectful relationships.

Five out of six children said they do not like the regular use of agency or unfamiliar staff. One child said, 'I don't like having strangers in my home. They don't know me, so how can they care for me?' Regular use of unfamiliar staff has meant that children are not provided with consistent care from people who know them well.

The home lacks warmth. It requires redecoration and refurbishment. Carpets and some walls are soiled. An inappropriate statement written on a child's door was not wiped away, some children are without wardrobes and a used mattress was discarded in the garden. Although there is a plan to maintain the home to a better standard, the children's current lived experience at the home is not good enough.

Social workers said that the staff team has become 'fractured' and that children are acutely aware of the difficult dynamics in the team. The manager has been unable to lead the staff team to work together to support the children's needs.

Not all staff have received supervision in line with the home's supervision policy. Opportunities have been missed to support staff. This has been at a time when they have had difficulty managing children's behaviours in addition to experiencing discord in the wider staff team. This shortfall was raised at the last inspection.

Staff receive appropriate training. All staff have the required qualification for their roles.

Risk assessments overall are good. However, one child's specific health needs have not been appropriately assessed. Therefore, staff are not provided with guidance to manage this health need safely. Risk assessments also fail to provide guidance for staff in the event that a child does not hand in their mobile phone as agreed in the children's plans. This has meant that one child has continued to use their phone when staff have had concerns that the child may be at risk from others online.

Staff and children said that the responsible individual is available and accessible and a good source of support. Staff and children said that the responsible individual can be relied on to create positive change and act on their wishes and requests.

The management of safeguarding concerns and allegations is good. Concerns are clearly recorded, referred promptly and responded to with rigour. This ensures that lessons learned are implemented and encourages preferred practice.

Staff manage children's missing from home incidents well. Restraints are only used when it is reasonable and proportionate to do so. Complaints are managed in line with the home's policy. Safer recruitment checks are in place to ensure that adults who work at the home are suitable.
