What is it like to attend this school?

Pupils are proud of their school. They like the fact that the school is small, which they say helps everyone to get on well. Pupils value the positive relationships they have with each other and adults.

Pupils behave well. They enjoy getting rewards for their positive behaviour. Pupils say that adults help them to sort out any issues. This includes on the rare occasions that bullying happens. They feel safe and well looked after. However, leaders have not ensured that safeguarding arrangements are effective.

Not all pupils learn about different types of families or same-sex relationships. Pupils in key stage 2 do not learn enough about different cultures and faiths.

Teachers' expectations of what pupils can achieve are not sufficiently high. Pupils who need additional support with their reading do not get appropriate help. Opportunities for pupils to take part in activities that enrich the curriculum continue to be affected by COVID-19.

What does the school do well and what does it need to do better?

The curriculum is not planned carefully enough. Some subject coordinators are developing curriculum plans that identify what pupils need to learn. However, teachers do not make sure that these plans always follow a logical order. Teachers do not consider what pupils have learned in the previous key stage, or what they will learn in the future.

Pupils are not as successful as they should be. Many pupils cannot remember what they have been taught previously. They do not know how they can get better at a subject. Too many pupils do not improve their knowledge and skills over time.

Teachers do not adapt the curriculum well enough for the pupils taught in mixed-aged classes. Younger pupils in these classes do not get the support they need to help secure their knowledge. Teachers do not have high-enough expectations of what the older pupils can achieve. Teachers do not make effective use of information about the needs of pupils with special educational needs and/or disabilities when planning the curriculum, to ensure that these pupils' needs are met.

Staff have not had appropriate phonics training. They do not insist that pupils use their phonics knowledge to read unknown words. Adults who help out with reading are given poor advice to improve pupils' reading. Pupils' reading books do not closely match the sounds that they know. Some pupils are not given the support they need to improve. Other pupils are not encouraged to move on when they are ready for the next stage. There is no whole-school approach to inspire pupils to read widely and often.

Staff make sure that children in the early years are cared for and looked after well. The early years curriculum covers all of the required areas. However, it is poorly organised. Children learn about unrelated topics at the same time. They do not learn new knowledge in a logical order. Some children cannot remember what they have studied before. Staff do not help them to use their knowledge to help them learn new things.

Pupils benefit from independent advice and guidance about their next steps. They are positive about their experiences at the school. However, the curriculum for personal, social, health and economic (PSHE) education is not planned well. Pupils have some opportunities to learn about different faiths and cultural traditions, but these are limited. Not all pupils have learned, in an age-appropriate way, what the law says about same-sex relationships.

The majority of pupils attend well. A minority of pupils are often late. Leaders' actions to improve pupils' punctuality have not been effective. During the inspection leaders could not provide evidence that they had informed the appropriate authorities when removing some pupils from the school's roll.

Senior leaders do not have an accurate understanding of the school's strengths and weaknesses. Their plans to bring about improvements do not reflect the areas that currently need development. Governors do not fulfil their responsibilities well. They have not ensured that the school meets all its duties. Senior leaders have a limited understanding of the independent school standards. The governing body has not ensured that these standards are met consistently.

Senior leaders have not ensured that the school's health and safety policy is implemented effectively. Checks related to fire safety, water temperatures and site maintenance are not recorded. Senior leaders are not aware of their responsibility to report specific accidents to the Health and Safety Executive. There is no fire assembly point identified on the school's site.

Inspectors found that the temperature of the water in the medical room and in the girls' toilet was too hot. This posed a risk of harm. Leaders were not aware that this was the case.

Risk assessments do not consistently identify all the possible risks that could harm pupils, for example when they are taking part in off-site visits. Risk assessments do not specify who is responsible for ensuring that actions are taken to reduce the possibility of pupils being harmed. Leaders could not provide inspectors with risk assessments for the school's site. This includes for the play equipment used by young pupils in the playground.

The school does not comply with schedule 10 of the Equality Act 2010. The accessibility plan does not consider how to improve participation in the curriculum and access to information for pupils with disabilities.

Safeguarding

The arrangements for safeguarding are not effective.

Governors have not ensured that leaders have the time and training they need to carry out their safeguarding responsibilities effectively. Leaders are uncertain what actions to take when they have concerns.

Safeguarding records are poorly organised and incomplete. They do not record the actions that leaders take in response to concerns. Leaders have not rectified weaknesses identified by a recent audit. They do not carry out the necessary checks before adults start work at the school.

Leaders do not recognise or respond to the signs that pupils may need additional support, for example if they do not attend well or cease attending. Leaders do not routinely inform the local authority when this is the case. This leaves pupils at risk of harm.

The safeguarding policy is on the school's website. However, it does not contain the latest statutory information.

What does the school need to do to improve?

(Information for the school and proprietor)

- The governing body has not ensured that the school's safeguarding arrangements are secure. There are too many weaknesses that leave pupils potentially unsafe. Leaders and staff do not understand their duties well enough. Staff are not aware of the latest national guidance in relation to harmful sexual behaviour or the 'Prevent' duty. The governing body needs to fulfil its safeguarding responsibilities, including in relation to the 'Prevent' duty. It should establish a secure culture of safeguarding, supported by robust practices and procedures. It should ensure that all staff and leaders are well trained, understand fully their safeguarding responsibilities and have the time and capacity to carry them out effectively. The governing body must ensure that safer recruitment practices and processes are followed consistently.
- The governing body and senior leaders do not have a secure understanding of the school's weaknesses. They have not ensured that the independent school standards are consistently met. Leaders and governors should take steps to improve their knowledge and understanding of the independent school standards and ensure that the standards are met consistently.
- The governing body has not ensured that the school meets its duties under the requirements of the Equality Act 2010. Leaders do not ensure that pupils learn about different types of families and relationships, such as same-sex relationships. Pupils are not encouraged to show respect for all of the protected characteristics. The governing body should ensure that the school meets the requirements of the Equality Act 2010 in full by ensuring that pupils learn about and respect all of the different protected characteristics.

- The governing body has not ensured that leaders' actions consistently promote pupils' health, welfare and safety. Checks related to health and safety and fire safety are not recorded. There are no risk assessments for the school site. Risk assessments for off-site trips are not fit for purpose. Consequently, pupils are potentially at risk. The governing body must make sure that it takes appropriate and swift action to rectify these weaknesses to support pupils' health, welfare and safety.
- The programme to support pupils' personal development is not well planned. Leaders do not provide pupils with sufficient opportunities to learn about British values. Pupils' learning about different faiths and cultural traditions is limited. Leaders do not make sure that all pupils know about what the law says in relation to same-sex relationships and the protected characteristics, in particular sexual orientation and gender reassignment. Pupils are therefore not as well prepared for living in modern Britain as they should be. Leaders must ensure that there is a comprehensive and well-planned PSHE curriculum that prepares pupils well for growing up in modern Britain.
- Leaders have not ensured that there is a plan in place to improve pupils' reading skills. Teachers are not confident teaching pupils how to use phonics to help them to read. The curriculum plan for reading does not match pupils' needs well. Some pupils do not get the support they need to read well. Pupils do not read books that are matched well to their phonics knowledge. Some pupils do not read as well as they should. Leaders must make sure that teachers have the resources and skills to teach phonics well, so that pupils learn to read fluently.
- Leaders have not supported teachers to develop and implement curriculum plans for mixed-age classes. The current curriculum plans do not help pupils to develop their knowledge sequentially. The expectations for older pupils in these classes are not high enough. Consequently, some pupils in these classes are not achieving as well as they should. Leaders must ensure that the curriculum is designed to meet the needs of pupils who are taught in mixed-age classes, and that all teachers have high expectations for what all pupils can achieve.
- Leaders' curriculum plans do not consistently take into account what pupils know or prepare them well for their next phase. Pupils cannot always remember what they have already learned and build on it. Leaders should ensure that curriculum plans take into account what pupils already know and prepare pupils well for the knowledge they will need moving forward.
