Overall experiences and progress of children and young people: good

The agency provides a good fostering service. Children receive highly individualised support and make good progress across their lives.

The agency makes effective matching decisions. Foster carers are able to meet the needs of children who come to live with them. This includes children with highly complex needs and past traumatic experiences. When necessary, the agency makes sure that the foster carers receive additional support and training to ensure that they can meet the child's needs.

The agency works together with all professionals to ensure that children's needs are holistically met. An example of this is the close working with health professionals to ensure that the foster carers for a child with specific health conditions and disabilities have the specialist skills and equipment to meet the child's needs.

The agency's foster carers are able to form close and trusting relationships with children. This helps children to develop a sense of belonging. All four children talked to spoke highly about their experiences.

The agency is ambitious for children and approves foster carers who value education. Children's school attendance, engagement with learning and attainment are high. For example, one child is head girl at her school and she is planning to go to university. Two young people, who have left their staying put arrangements, studied accountancy.

Foster carers provide clear boundaries and emotional warmth to children. This enables children to develop a sense of security and the skills to manage difficult emotions. Children's behaviours improve over time, and this helps them to develop positive relationships with other children and adults.

Foster carers ensure that children have opportunities to develop their interests and have fun. Children engage in various activities of their choice, such as basketball, karate and music. Foster carers help children to have their say and confidently express their choices.

The agency provides stability in children's lives. In one case in the last 12 months, this agency's foster carers became special guardians for two children who they had fostered. Some children have been matched permanently with their foster families. Some young adults who have moved to live independently stay close to their foster families and visit them regularly. This shows the positive and long-lasting bond that children form with their foster families.

How well children and young people are helped and protected: good

The agency is effective at keeping children safe and protected. There have been no major safeguarding incidents or concerns since the last inspection. Children have developed a sense of safety and security. All children spoken to said that they feel safe.

The professionals spoken to did not have any concerns about the children currently placed with this agency or with the agency's practices. The professionals commented positively about the agency's contribution to joint working to safeguard children.

The local police provided training to foster carers on how to safely deal with incidents without criminalising children. The agency is familiar with the local multi-agency protocol for safeguarding children when they are missing from home or absent without authority. Children said that they liked being with their foster families and, at the time of the inspection, none of the children go missing from home.

All foster families have their own safe care plan, which is updated every time a new foster child joins their family. These plans are usually agreed between the primary foster carer and the supervising social workers. However, the other household members do not have the opportunity to contribute to these plans and this could potentially affect their understanding of and commitment to the plan.

All children have individual risk assessments and safety plans. However, the assessments of the online risks to children are limited. Online safety risk assessments are an area for improvement.

Foster carers receive training on a number of safeguarding topics. This helps them to understand the risks and know how to protect children. However, foster carers would benefit from training on online safety, radicalisation, female genital mutilation, honour-based violence and forced marriage. Although all members of the fostering households are invited to training, it is only recently that the agency required that all members attend.

The agency vets all staff before appointing them. However, they do not keep records to demonstrate that they have explored gaps in employment histories and verified references.

The agency has good links with the local authority's designated safeguarding lead for dealing with allegations (LADSL). However, when a complainant made a comment that the leaders and managers were not safeguarding children, this was not shared with the LADSL until the inspection. An independent fostering organisation completed the investigation and found this allegation to be unsubstantiated.

The agency has contributed to the child safeguarding practice review relating to a serious incident that happened in May 2021. The agency is waiting for the outcome of this review for any learning points.

The effectiveness of leaders and managers: requires improvement to be good

A stable leadership and management team ensures that the agency fulfils its statement of purpose. Leaders and managers provide a fostering service which is in line with the agency's conditions of registration in relation to the age of children.

Leaders and managers are child-focused. They monitor children's experiences and outcomes effectively. They are aspirational about what children can achieve and make sure that the foster carers are supported to enable children to make progress.

The foster carers spoken to are appreciative of the support that they receive from the agency. They spoke highly about their supervising social workers and the agency as a whole. When foster carers were asked if the agency could do anything more to support them and the children better, they said that they could not think of anything.

Staff supervision, team meetings and training provide opportunities for staff to reflect on and develop their fostering practices. All staff receive an annual review of their performance. However, the registered manager has never had an appraisal.

The agency has improved since the previous inspection. Leaders, managers and staff ensure that announced monthly visits to fostering households, as well as weekly phone calls and unannounced visits, take place regularly and focus on safeguarding children.

However, quality assurance is still weak in some aspects of the service and is an area that requires improvement. The agency's annual review of the quality of the service does not include any analysis and evaluation of the agency's information or stakeholders' views. The annual review for the year ending March 2022 was not sent to Ofsted in a timely manner and was only made available to Ofsted during the inspection.

The agency's practice is not always sufficiently evidence based. The agency's leaders and managers do not always identify shortfalls in records. For example, there is no healthcare plan for a child who has profound health needs and is on medication. However, this information is available in other records. Other examples include shortfalls in the assessment of a prospective foster carer and some approved foster carers' reviews. Some annual reviews of foster carers' suitability were not completed in a timely manner.

The agency's fostering panel and the agency's decision-maker (ADM) are completely independent from the agency. They make a strong contribution to the agency's quality assurance processes and improvement journey. The ADM and the panel provide clear feedback to the agency on a regular basis and help them to track the progress that is being made.
